

TRAVEL

10 Suburban Rooftops That Are Just as Alive in the Fall as They Are in the Summer

By KELLI ACCIARDO @kelliacciaro

Even though Labor Day is this weekend and we're deep into the "summer don't go" blues, that doesn't mean you can't take advantage of a few more weekends of warm weather—fingers crossed. Most urban rooftop sanctuaries keep their tippity-top hot spots open through September and October and some even keep the party going year-round, with indoor-outdoor access and lots of heat lamps.

From New York, Boston and Philly, to Denver, San Francisco and Memphis, here's where to head when you're not ready to say goodbye to al fresco day drinking and breezy perches with the best views just yet.

Upstairs at The Kimberly Hotel in New York, NY

---

The beauty of the indoor-outdoor Upstairs at The Kimberly (besides the fact that it sits 30-stories high) is that it's open year-round, friends. That means 365 days of unrivaled glimpses of midtown Manhattan and The Chrysler Building, along with retractable glass walls and ceilings, a bucket list-worthy NYC-style weekend brunch and daily small plates and adult bevs starting at 5 p.m.