Susan Brabeau in her own words:

I am the great granddaughter of an incredible stone sculptor who brought his family to America from Germany. I share his passion to create and offer it up to others. All three of my Great uncles were portrait painters. I graduated with a teaching degree in math and science from Michigan State University, did the beauty pageant circuit, sang my way through school singing with a big band in Detroit, sang for two presidents, sang the soundtrack for a movie that was nominated for an Academy Award, was an actress in New York, was the female lead in a musical called Shenandoah on Broadway. But here is the important part. I am a wife, a mother, and am devoted to the care and rescue of animals of all kinds, all of this on my wonderful old farm in North Carolina. I carried a newborn bunny in my shirt for 4 days to keep him warm after he lost his Mom. Life is so precious. Very seldom will you find any of my work without animals in them. They are my best friends at home. After 25 years of constant painting and exploring my craft, I am now only seeing a glimmer of what I can do as an artist. Hard times have made me search my heart for what is really important for me to put on canvas and how I want to express myself.

Welcome to my garden!

In March of 2019, I decided to embark on a new journey with my oil paintings, detouring from a career as a portrait painter and “Magic Realist” artist. My creative pivot was an immersion into the extensive gardens on my farm to paint flowers and vegetable plants. I use a special combination of oil paints and iridescent enamels, so the paintings glow even in normal light.

Part of my process has been to take photos at night with a special head lamp and flashlight. During these explorations, I come across all kinds of interesting insects and amphibians, lurking in the dark, nocturnal dwellers of this enchanted kingdom. I backlight most of my night photos so that the colors pop in my paintings.
